

when the person sitting in the oval office is not compared to a chip, will you still march in the streets, asking for the justice that we deserve?
or will you look over the imperialistic manners towards the oh, so charming smile he grants us with?

will you still stand for liberty and justice for all?
or only for the white straight men with more appealing appearance and a mask on?

just because someone does not blabber on a bird-themed app on the injustices he has caused does not mean that they have a good intention.

yes, we've resorted to our last option and even though it may not seem as appealing
as we desire,
we have to choose the better of both
evils.

but the question is
will you march on for the better good or will you let your fist down?

Will you remember those who've been done wrong
by the corruption of the system,
work in progress,
as they rest in power or will it be all forgotten when the white man places their palm on the inauguration bible?

Will your fist still clench in passion for the people when it's his turn?
will it?
because remember it is not just one person,
it is the whole system that is hurting us all.

will we keep him on his word when he swears upon it or was it only for trump?
